Minn. National Guard's 1/34 BCT receives new commander

Col. Kevin Gutknecht officially relinquished command of the 1/34th Brigade Combat Team to Col. Eric Kershka in a change of command ceremony July 12, 2004 at Camp Ripley, Minnesota.

Gutknecht took command of the brigade soon after they returned from a 22-month deployment, and was charged with restructuring and reforming the brigade.

"(The) last few years of the brigade has been focused on the future; preparing the brigade for a future for whatever mission that may be," said Gutknecht in his farewell address to the Brigade. "The command's mission was to reset, refit and get the brigade back into the fighting form. I am here today to tell you that the mission is fulfilled, or well on its way to being fulfilled."

Gutknecht attributes the success of the mission to the dedication of the Soldiers and leadership of his battalion commanders.

"The future is bright for this Nation, and the future is bright for the 1st Brigade Combat Team."

"There is really no doubt that the 1st

Brigade Combat Team is now the flagship of the Minnesota National Guard," said Brig. Gen. Joseph Kelly, Assistant Adjutant General-Joint Staff, Minnesota National Guard, during the ceremony. "How you do, how you go, so goes the Minnesota National Guard.

During his time as commander, Gutknecht saw his brigade called upon for both state and federal missions, including flood fighting in the Red River Valley, assisting with the Republican National Convention and providing security during the inauguration of the President of the United States.

Kershka, who has been associated with the 1st Brigade Combat Team for more than 26 years, said he was rendered speechless in the honor of leading the Brigade.

"With the exception of my family, my 26-year association with the First Brigade has meant more to me than anything else in my life," he said.

"Most of you served in Iraq when you showed the world what a National Guard Brigade can do. That 23-month period and the associated pain was the defining period of my life. The relationships that I built and the relationships that I made defined who I am. To be given the opportunity to serve for even one more day fills me with emotion that words ...can't possibly describe."

Kershka thanked his family for their understanding and supporting him through the years.

"For you cannot fully understand the term 'brothers in arms' or what it really means, you smile when I leave you, and you smile when I come home," he said. "That is good enough for me."

"To the Soldiers of the First Brigade; the road ahead of us is steep, twisty and full of potholes," he said, addressing his Soldiers standing in formation. "During the many challenges that lie ahead of us, never forget that we are Minnesota Soldiers. That has always meant that we are something special, something special that our communities, state and our Nation can always count on when the chips are down. There is absolutely nothing that you can't do when you pull together. Few in this world understand what you do... or why you do it..

Kershka concluded the ceremony by addressing his Soldiers, "Don't tell me this generation doesn't have what it takes. Gone are the summertime soldiers. What is left is this ... you. The brightest and the best this country has to offer."
